To Whom It May Concern,

As a practitioner in this state who has devoted my entire career strictly to the practice of family law, I want to stress that the use of remote proceedings in family matters has been highly advantageous to litigants and practitioners. It saves litigants unnecessary fees for time spent waiting in court houses as well as the travel time of their counsel. It also allows practitioners to handle more matters in a day, thus reducing delay in matters being resolved and/or moving forward. My experience has been that there is no downside to the handling of motions, conferences, mesp, and mediation virtually and that these proceedings should remain virtual.

Thank you,
