Wireless Access in the Essex County Courthouse

Wireless Internet access is now available throughout the Essex County Courthouse, Assignment Judge Patricia K. Costello announced today.

Essex County court users are now able to use their personal laptops to send e-mail and access the Internet throughout the court complex, including the law library and the jury assembly room.

According to Judge Costello, "We are offering this service to litigants, jurors and attorneys as they await their court cases in order to help them maximize their time and increase their efficiency. The historic beauty of the Essex County Courthouse is greatly enhanced by the convenience of 20th century technology," she added.

To access the wireless network, court users need only double click on the wireless network icon on their laptop display, click on the "New Jersey Judiciary Public Network" selection, and log on. The network allows broad access to the Internet, but some sites may be restricted due to content. The connection to the network is terminated when the user logs off or shuts down the laptop.
