Honorable Glenn A. Grant, J.A.D.
Acting Administrative Director of the Courts

Dear Judge Grant and members of the Ad Hoc Committee on Domestic Violence:

In response to the request for comments on the June 2016 Report of the Supreme Court Ad Hoc Committee on Domestic Violence, please accept this submission from the Burlington County Prosecutor's Office regarding Recommendation 9.

Recommendation 9 calls for the review of Domestic Violence Response Team (DVRT) policies pursuant to N.J.S.A. 2C:25-20(b)(3)(1) and the consideration of a statewide mandated call-out policy for DVRT advocates as well as more oversight to police departments with respect to DVRT utilization. Burlington County created and issued a directive establishing such a policy in 2008. This directive, still in place today, established procedures for the creation of a DVRT and provides guidelines for the utilization and call-out of those Team advocates. A copy of the directive is attached hereto.

The mission of the Burlington County Prosecutor's Office, to enforce laws fairly, impartially, and justly while treating all victims of with compassion and dignity, drives our approach to supporting and creating programs like the DVRT that will benefit crime victims, their families, law enforcement, the Prosecutor's Office, and the community as a whole. In our experience, our established, mandated DVRT call-out program benefits domestic violence victims at a time during which they are most vulnerable. We have learned, through victims who consistently communicate that the sense of knowing they are not alone is extremely empowering, that the sooner a rapport and connection between a DVRT advocate and a victim can be built the more useful it will be.

To accomplish this, the Burlington County DVRT protocols mandate that if a report of a domestic violence incident qualifies, a DVRT advocate must be called to respond. This protocol gives victims an opportunity to speak to a DVRT advocate without delay and prevents the victim from feeling that they are imposing on someone's time. This is an important protocol since we know from victim input, prior to the implementation of this mandate, that when asked if they would like to speak with a DVRT advocate, by a law enforcement officer, they often felt as though they were creating a burden and would subsequently turn down this service.

Importantly, when a DVRT advocate responds, a victim has the right to refuse to speak to the DVRT advocate - it is always their choice. In our view, there is no downside to calling out an advocate since it is the victim that ultimately makes the decision whether or not to speak to them. It is clearly communicated that the decision is solely the victim's and that their decision will be respected. We recognize the need to empower victims with the ability to make decisions that will be respected at a time when many domestic violence victims' control and respect have been taken from them by their abusers.

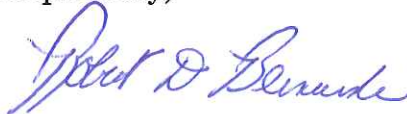

Additionally, this call-out policy provides for uniformity of services to all domestic violence victims throughout Burlington County. Regardless of their socioeconomic status, race, gender, sexual or gender orientation, or township of residence, they will receive equal opportunity for assistance from a DVRT advocate.

A mandated call-out policy benefits law enforcement as well. This policy provides clear direction to a responding officer— it takes the assessment out of their hands and allows them to focus on the tasks required of them to do their job. Reports of domestic violence incidents can be intense, complicated, and emotional. Police officers are tasked, at a minimum, with the gathering of facts, establishing probable cause, making an arrest, filing a criminal complaint, interviewing parties and witnesses, etc. Often times, a victim has many questions and concerns that can easily sway from the current incident to other unrelated topics. This type of interaction can become time consuming and while an officer may not want to appear disinterested or unhelpful, they may not have the ability to give this time and attention to a victim while performing their required tasks. The call-out of a DVRT advocate allows an officer to carry on with his or her job while the advocate focuses on the victim's needs and provides the necessary emotional support.

The Prosecutor's Office also benefits from the DVRT call-out program. With this program, citizens of this county are served with compassion, dignity and respect and domestic violence victims are not alone when trying to navigate what lies ahead. This support of victims, by trained advocates in the system at every level, also leads to more successful prosecutions of offenders. Victims build strength and confidence over time and when asked to come forward in court are more likely to do so knowing there is support behind them. The DVRT advocate serves as that first line of support.

Given the success of Burlington County's mandated DVRT call-out program, a statewide, mandated automatic call-out policy for DVRT advocates is beneficial to victims, law enforcement and prosecutor's offices in the furtherance of the Prevention of Domestic Violence Act of New Jersey.

Respectfully,

Robert D. Bernardi
Burlington County Prosecutor
